

General information for authors

All students from the Radboud University in a language/linguistics bachelor's or master's programme who want to publish a paper on linguistics can submit a manuscript to RU:ts. RU:ts publishes contributions that belong to the following categories:

- Research articles
- Research proposals

Papers from both categories can be based on theses, course papers, research for internships, or honours projects. Should you have any doubt about whether or not your paper is suitable, please get in touch with the editorial board (rutsjournal@let.ru.nl).

In addition, it is possible to inform the editorial board about your opinion on any topic discussed in one of the previous issues, to give feedback, to provide additional information, or to notify us about content you wish to be included in the upcoming issue.

Submission

Thank you for your interest in submitting your work to RU:ts! We are looking forward to receive your contribution that hopefully results in a publication in the journal's forthcoming issue. Before submitting, check if you meet the requirements below.

- Please make sure the manuscript is complete.
- Please give your manuscript the following name:
lastname_initials_year_BA/MA.doc(x) AND lastname_initials_year_BA/MA.pdf. Add possible infixes after the initials. Examples:
  - o jansen_ha_2016_BA.docx
  - o bakker_s_de_2015_MA.docx
- Please read the separate guidelines for authors on our website (<http://ruts-journal.ruhosting.nl/en/guidelines-authors/>) carefully before submitting your work.

Peer review

In order to provide high-quality information, we use peer review. This consists of peers (e.g. researchers at the same point in their career, doing research into the same topics) evaluating the research paper, and advising on whether or not the paper is of the sufficient quality needed to be published.

To ensure that we have enough reviewers, all authors that submit a paper are also asked to review a paper. You can read more about the review process on our website (<http://ruts-journal.ruhosting.nl/en/information-for-reviewers/>).
